Prescription

Catherine loved living below, but the tunnels often seemed like Grand Central Station. Sometimes, she missed the quiet seclusion of her apartment.

She needed a place to mellow out - without seeming antisocial.

There were only two places nearby. One was too small and specialized, but the other ... yes! She'd earned it after a day of community chores.

When Vincent returned, he sensed Catherine was very relaxed. He smiled when he realized where she was and joined her gladly. After a long kiss, they sighed happily as they floated in warm water, wreathed in steam.

Prescription filled. Repeat as necessary.
