Consciousness

Dr. Sanderly had gone and Catherine came slowly back to reality. Being in a hospital room was so familiar, yet still so strange.

She could smell the fragrance of flowers. She was getting the best possible medical treatment. But she was alone and felt desolate, deserted.

What a difference, when she came to her senses that last time, aching with horrifying emotional and physical pain. There she had heard a wonderful comforting voice. Whenever she awakened, he had been close by.

Again she thought about Vincent and sighed. Now she knew he had been right. Reading would be a help.
