It's Always Been "All True"

By Cindy Rae

I think I've always found you.
And I think that you've found me.
I think our love just made it so -
Across eternity.

I think we've always had a bond,
And wished upon a star,
And stared up at the wayward moon,
No matter when we are.

I think it's always been "all true."
I'm sure you've worn a crown.
I think I've always had some pearls
And a white, soft, shimmer-gown.

I'd like to think I'm always yours,
And you are always mine.
No matter when and where we are,
Our stars always align.

I'd know you dressed in armor
And I'd know you with a sword.
I'd know you as a peasant-knight,
A Viking, or a Lord.

I'd know you as a beggar-prince,
No matter where you'd be.
And just as I know you, my love,
I know that you'd know me.

So, you save me and I'll save you,
Our interlocking fate
Is gratefully accepted, love,
(After some debate.)

I bet you always danced with me.
I bet I danced with you.
I bet you read me stories
Because that's what lovers do.

Don't bemoan what I'd give up,
Or what chance you'd have to take.
I'd trade a sunset for a poem,
In whatever world we make.

In caverns low, or castles high,
Or down a winding stair,
Wherever and whenever, love,
You know that we'll be there.

At the end of our Aloneness,
Starts a legend, Old and New.
In a world where you always found me,
And we made it all All True.

So, if they say that we're ill-matched,
Don't mind them in the least.
For who's to say "Who's the Beauty?
And which one is the Beast?"

This poem was completely and utterly inspired by the amazing artwork of Judith Nolan.
