

As Others Do

by Angie

Vincent growled at his mask and shook it dismissively.

Catherine, her mask in place, chuckled understandingly.

“I know it's not fair, Vincent, but it has to be.”

“On this day of all days, Catherine, I have a right to be annoyed,” he grated.

She nodded. What could she say? He was correct.

They went above, having decided to visit the New York Library. Even closed because of the pandemic, it was wonderful to see together.

As they neared it, Vincent stiffened. Then he laughed.

Catherine, seeing what he saw, laughed too.

Their mood lightened - and so did Halloween.

