“What are you doing, Jake?” Diana asked.

The ten-year-old turned, backing away, caught. “I was just looking for a gift.”

Diana raised her eyebrows, silently urging the child to continue.

Jake gestured to the rosebush. “I thought Mom would like this back.”

“Ah. You know your mom let me keep it.” Diana crouched, caressing the budding plant. “The rose bush needs sunlight to thrive. I don’t think you get a ton of that Below.”

Jake pouted. “But I have to give them a gift. It’s their anniversary.”

“I see. Hm... you know...” Diana grinned, holding out her hand. “I have an idea.”
