

A Beauty and the Beast Tidbit (100 words)

by Angie

Parting

Catherine hugged Vincent, felt his heart beating furiously beneath her ear. She pulled away slightly and kissed him on the chin. Then she turned to climb the ladder to her basement.

Vincent felt an intense moment of bliss before desire roared through him as he watched her climb. He knew she had felt his passion - and matched it with her own. She turned her head and caught his eye.

"Tomorrow," she whispered

Vincent sighed. "Tomorrow," he agreed. Did all lovers feel such pain?

Catherine disappeared through the trapdoor and the tunnel suddenly felt empty. But he no longer felt alone.