The Price of Love

It was undeniable. Every time Vincent risked himself for her, he walked into great danger and lost a little of himself. This had happened too often for her to deny her responsibility.

'Some things are worth risking everything for' rang in her head. Fine, inspiring words, but not when Vincent had to suffer for the risks she took.

She could not continue as she had.

Her work demanded personal confrontation, answers, convictions. This had to change, since Vincent could not.

She would review her life choices and career, then change her priorities.

Love and Vincent were all that mattered now.
